Loving the bigness of the smallness, don't'cha know

Maybelle's

Fireside stories

DEAR READER,

Why, if Ol' Maybelle isn't having a moment. One of those special moments that I want to put a pin in and keep top of mind for a long, long time. And it's not about anything BIG that happened. In fact, it's about the smallness of what happened today that is keeping my heart toasty warm, reminding me just how wonderful it can be living in the small rural town of Lake WhaddayathinkImean, don'tcha know.

You see, I had no big plans today. Just a date to drive around in ol' Brewster, my truck, doing a bunch of small errands with my ol' friend, Beanpole Starkman. It was Beanpole's birthday, don'tcha know, and he's a handful to buy anything for, so I figured, take him with and have him just POINT at what he wants. I also wanted to support our local businesses by picking up some Christmas gifts, with Santa being on the horizon, and all.

Now, here's where the magic came in.

Why, wouldn't you know, EVERYWHERE we went, and I mean everywhere, we bumped into folks we not only know, but really like.

At the gas station, it was Mort Mullingsworth and his seven rescue dogs. Why we hadn't flapped lips in a blue moon. So, there we were filling our tanks with truck food and hearing all about Mort's recent trip to the Dominican Republic, don'tcha know.

Then we bumped into Mister Lake and his 92-year-old heart throb, Ethel. Believe it or not, Mister is Lake's real first name. His sister's name is Sweet and his brother's first name is Lucky. For some reason, Mister's folks gave him the moniker that would always guarantee a certain amount of respect. Our conversation, which began outside on the steps of Walton's General Store of Lake W, included hugs and greetings from Mister's cousin Bob who said: Next time you see Maybelle, tell her "We'll always have Wasaga Beach. She'll know what that means."

And I did. And it's none of your business.

At Lucky's Discounts, Beanpole pointed to a frying pan and a pair of thermal socks.

"Blue plaid, you're sure? Or, the brown?" I asked.

"Blue."

And that was it. Why had I bothered asking? It's always blue with Beanpole.

Then, at the Dominion Hotel restaurant in Minden, if we didn't see Angie and Tetley Nummins being seated right at the table beside us, don'tcha know.

"Boy, it's been a long time. And I love that purple streak in your hair," I said to Angie.

"Runs in the family," she said, with a laugh.

More flapping of lips. And it didn't stop there.

Two blocks from ol' Maybelle's cottage, I stop at a newspaper display thingie to pick up an issue of County Life, and who taps me on the shoulder, but Minnie Stevenson Lewis McGreggor Helmsley O'Connor White, don'tcha know. Why ol' Minnie had a pile of husbands and as many stories to tell. She looked surprisingly spry catching her breath after a wee jog from her condo across the street. "Maybelle, I'd like you to meet, Boris," she said, beaming at her white-haired, bearded to the waist, new beau, decked out in Nike runners and a Toronto Raptors cap. "We're engaged."

My day was made and it didn't take much, don'tcha know. Just steppin' out with a dear old friend into the smallness of Lake WhaddayathinkImean and filling myself with the bigness of community. Yep, that's all it took.

Maybelle's Fireside Stories is written by Jerelyn Craden. "Maybelle's Cure for What Ails You," 21 of Maybelle's best short stories, and "Vessie Flamingo Outshining the Moon" (a novel) is now available at www.amazon.com.

Storytellers of Haliburton County

Writers observe and absorb their surroundings

JANET TRULL
Special to County Life

Why are there so many writers in the Haliburton Highlands? I believe it's because you cannot help but absorb the magic of the planet that is trapped in Precambrian rock. Layers of life going back billions of years. It just seems important to capture this beauty in writing.

Inspiration is everywhere in the Highlands. Writers are often introverts, lonely wanderers who sometimes must force themselves to hang out with people. Without a writing community, editors, and critical friends, writing tends to be nothing more than an echo chamber. It's hard to share your innermost thoughts with others. What if it's garbage? But a good writing group offers more than opinions. They give specific criteria for improvement.

Hemingway famously advised, "Write drunk, edit sober." The truth is, your first draft should be kind of sloppy as you dump all your thinking onto the page. The second draft is the morning after, when you must tidy up (get rid of those empties). By the third draft, you should be ready for company. Now's the time to send your story out into the universe. It's nice to get flattery and encouragement, but what you really need is a group of discerning readers who will be honest and helpful with next steps.

Here's what Haliburton-inspired author Rosemary McCracken has to say about building an effective writing practice:

"Hello! I was a cottager for many years on Saskatchewan Lake (Highway 35, just north of Hall's Lake) in the Haliburton Highlands. This past summer, I had a book table at Minden Bookapalooza and I plan to return to in 2025. Two of my mystery novels, Black Water and Raven Lake, are set in fictional Ontario cottage country that bears a very strong resemblance to the Haliburton Highlands. The main character in my series is Paty Tierney, a financial advisor. Her character came into my mind after years of writing personal finance articles for Canadian newspapers and magazines. Amateur sleuths usually have a profession or a line of work, and the knowledge this work gives them enables them to solve the crimes in their world. I realized that Pat's profession as a financial advisor would give her plenty of crimes to explore and people to protect in subsequent stories. She grows in confidence and experience with every client or friend she helps.

As a writer, I get ideas for characters by observing people in daily activities, listening in on their conversations, and taking note of physical appearances. Character names are important as well. I look for names suited to a character, and popular in the decades in which they grew up. I try not to have more than one first name starting with the same letter in the book, or it becomes confusing to the reader. Dialogue is extremely important. The vocabulary characters use and the manner in which they express themselves tell readers about their education, social class, personality and aspirations.

I've belonged to a trusted writers' group of six authors, most of them award winning crime fiction writers, for the past 20 years. We meetly monthly, and they provide invaluable feedback. My husband Ed Piwowarczyk, a former newspaper editor and now a freelance fiction editor, is the first reader of a completed manuscript. Then it goes to my editor and finally it goes off to Carrick Publishing.

Fiction writers generally identify themselves as either plotters (who create detailed plots before they start writing, and follow those plots closely from A to Z) or pantsers (those who write by the seat of their pants). I consider myself a hybrid blend of the two. I'm a character-driven writer, and I need to know my characters well before I can start telling their stories. But I also know the importance of having a well-structured plot. A plot functions like hangers do in a clothing closet; without the hangers, your clothes would lie in a heap on the floor.

My plot outline includes the classic cause-and-effect plot points: an inciting incident, a call to action, a midpoint where new decisions are made, a reversal, a climax and a resolution. I'll pin these plot points to the wall beside my computer for easy reference. Some plot points will change over time, but it's a place to start. Next, I look at subplots that weave in and out of the story sequence, making sure they won't take over the story. Then I'll put on my copy-editing hat and go through the novel polishing the prose and dialogue. I delete needless repetition, check that my protagonist's car doesn't change colour half-way through the book, and that five major characters don't all have first names starting with the letter "m."

As for tips for new writers, I can only say, don't give up! If you truly want to be a published author, keep writing. Try not to let rejections get to you, although that sometimes can be difficult. Pick a time of day that works for you (mornings for me) and be at your desk consistently at those times. Persistence is key to success."

My Advent Calendar

GAIL STELTER

Special to County Life

They are supposed to open one little cardboard window in the cardboard calendar to find chocolate or a surprise. You know that only a few of them might do this, and most of your grandchildren will eat them all at once when no one is looking. You love this. It's all part of the season's fun and your memories.

The Advent Calendar is from the German word Adventskalender and is used to count the days until Christmas. Advent is a season observed in many Christian denominations as the expectant waiting for the celebration of the Nativity of Christ. For those who believe this and equally for those who do not, I am inviting you to fashion your own Advent Calendar that speaks to your loves and likes and honours your age and lifestyle.

What will happen in December over the twenty-four days leading up to Christmas? What will you do: every day, once a week or once a month? This requires thought and reflection. What are your seasonal loves and likes?

I suspect we will have some in common and also some that are perfectly unique to you. The key is to set aside time to put your calendar in practice. So, as your calendar marks your appointments and commitments, also have it mark your Advent happenings.

Here are a few things I have added each week to my personal Advent Calendar: a memory, a decoration, a donation, a food, a quiet hour, a Christmas movie, and a fun outing. They may work for you, or perhaps not. I hope that if you find yourself saying "no way," you may also be saying, "Instead, I will…"

A memory. Pick one memory each week and a song that fits. The birthday party was yesterday, so today we are getting the tree. The carboat, I mean Ford LTD, has two bench seats: three kids in the back and one in the middle in the front.

"Dad, did you bring the saw?"

The Christmas barn at the farm is not new but chopping down our own tree is. We brought the toboggan.

"Yes, sure did." As Peter slips the Christmas CD, we start singing Silver Bells. Oh, I love that song. It was one of my dad's favourites. This sweet voice beside sings out loud and clear, and she knows every word. How did she learn that? It is a lovely memory and I will revisit it in its wonderful nostalgic entirety.

A decoration. Admire and remember the significance of a Christmas decoration, You may think of one already put up or you may wish to purchase or make a new decoration each week.

There wasn't much left from my childhood Christmases but when my mom died I found a small plastic jack-in-the-box that is Santa-in-a-chimney and when you pop up the lid, a little very cheap plastic Santa head appears. I got it at Simpsons or Eastons on a visit to tell Santa what I wanted for Christmas. It is old and is almost broken. It takes me back to Toyland and forward to grandchildren delighting in playing with it. I will hold it and reveal the joy. I am excited to think of the special decoration memories on my Advent Calendar.

A donation. There is a gift we give to ourselves. It is called giving to others less fortunate and in need. It is easy to give ourselves this gift. What could it be? Help fill the cruiser with food, or donate a toy. Drop off a few pairs of mitts at a local school for kids who forget theirs or don't have any. How about a cash donation to a local charity? Bake cookies for someone who you know will be alone this Christmas. You may wish to pace yourself and consider if you can make a new donation each week of Advent. Write this on your calendar on the day and at the time you set aside to do this. I've figured mine out and my calendar reminds me.

A food. Shortbread cookies, hot butterscotch sauce, a yule log, candy canes, cracker jacks, eggnog or whatever food or drink says advent to you. I love shortbread cookies. Of course, I do. They are the most calories.

"Don't eat the candy canes off the tree. They're decorations. You can eat them at Christmas."

He would shake his head, and when he got older, he protested, "Mom, we have so many candies and chocolate and stuff at Christmas that we don't want them. You end up giving them away."

He was right, and I have finally learned my lesson. Eat the candy canes in Advent and buy more if you need them. Open the Scottish shortbread: one package for Advent and save the second one for Christmas. It's on my calendar. Bake their favourite cookies and treats and set one aside for you for each week in Advent. Put it on your calendar.

A quiet hour. This has a special place on my advent calendar. I might use it to read a book, call a child, connect with friends and cousins on Facebook, have a nap, or, have a hot chocolate and sit and look out my window on my world. I put this on my calendar three times each week.

A Christmas movie. I know you are smiling when you think of your favourite or traditional Christmas movies. I like lots of them, but the two on my Advent Calendar are Christmas Vacation and A Christmas Story.

A fun outing. This is another one of those calendar items that is unique to each of us. I added my daughter's birthday, driving around and looking at the lights, meeting friends for lunch and going to the bookstore. I can imagine that yours may be more exciting and grand. Enjoy!

Well, that was the easy part. The hard part was printing out my calendar and putting all of the above on it. I am still not sure why I decided to do this, but it has been fun. There are lots of things to do during Advent, and tailoring these to your personal Advent Calendar may prove to be fun for you too. Welcome Advent.

Baby steps

EIGHT MONTHS ago, I gave birth to a healthy baby boy. He was two weeks late, so with that delayed entrance into the world, the very first thing our little boy taught us is that there is no rhyme or reason to newborns. Some cry, some don't. Some sleep, some don't. Some coo and cackle, some don't. Some breastfeed, some don't.

EMILY STONEHOUSE
County Life Editor

And with the lottery that is life, you never know what you're going to get. I always laughed at people who said their babies "keep them on their toes."

They're infants. They weigh less than a watermelon. How do these little beings keep you on your toes?

Boy, was I ever ill-prepared for the tiny personality that came from me.

He's not just keeping me on my toes - I'm hovering above the ground.

I've never seen anything move as fast as this small child putting dirt into his mouth. The Leafs could benefit from the reflexes of this child. I don't know how he does it.

He's spritely and active and moving non-stop. With keeping in the pattern of abandoning rhyme and reason, he entirely skipped the crawling step. At first, this made me concerned, but then I realized that babies aren't reading the how-to books on parenting; they're the ones writing the rules.

While he bypassed the crawling stage, he quite literally hopped right into walking. He hasn't quite mastered it yet; using anything in his reach to pull and pivot himself around the house.

Just the other day, he started taking independent steps, slowly but surely gaining more confidence without his makeshift balance beams. At one point, he let go of his support and toddled two free steps towards me.

Until he fell.

"He's doing it!" said my excited husband.

"No, he just fell," I noted.

"It all starts with a fall," he responded.

That got me thinking. It all starts with a fall. His whole life ahead of him – running and moving and dancing and biking and skating. It's all getting started right now. With a fall.

And he was so proud of that little fall.

Because that fall signified the beginning of so much. And while it wasn't smooth and graceful, he stood back up, and he tried again. He will keep trying. He's trying right now while I type this.

Another lift, another stumble, another fall.

Sometimes, we avoid starting something new. Even as adults, if there is a risk, a chance that we could fall, we so instantly shy away from it. We look for the easy way out. The opportunity to tread carefully; avoiding bumps and bruises along the way. Both metaphorically and literally.

I've often heard the term "baby steps" when referring to taking things easy, taking them slow, taking them cautiously.

But I think we should change the meaning behind that phrase. Because baby steps are the bravest thing we can do. To try something new, to push yourself harder, to go outside your comfort zone, to fall. That's how a baby steps, and we should all learn from that.

So here is to the falls. The stumbles. The challenges. The baby steps. One day, my little boy will take off; running and moving and dancing and biking and skating – his life full of magic and music and wonder. And I will look back, and remember these early days of watching him teeter and totter around the house.

And to think - it all started with a fall.

Top 10 reasons social media sucks

THE OLDER I get, the more I think social media is the worst thing that's ever been foisted upon us. That's probably an unpopular assessment of a modern mass media that's taken the world by storm. But hear me out.

These are my top 10 reasons for thinking social media sucks.

STEVE GALEA
Humour Columnist

1. I have never cared what anyone eats for lunch unless I am paying for it.
2. Before social media posts, I never wasted two hours a day shaking my head.
3. Call me old fashioned, but I'd rather not argue about things I know nothing about with people I know nothing about.
4. I never used to feel obligated to spend my precious time wishing acquaintances a happy belated birthday.
5. In the old days when someone had a conversation with the camera pointed towards themselves, we thought they were either lonely or a hostage.
6. Three likes? Really?
7. Who in the real world does anything authentic using three camera angles and filters?
8. You take one selfie with parsley in your teeth and that's what goes viral?
9. When some people wear skimpy bikinis, they get six million followers. When I do it, I get banned from the site.
10. If not for camera drones, I would have never known I had a bald spot.

Light

Milkweed fluff floating through Air, over the forest of reeds springing from the marsh, their straw-coloured spines, rustling in the Wind, how brittle they appear, as they bend and sway, clusters of them crumpled into heaps, flattened by Wind, that carries the fleck of fluff higher and higher into the seamless blue of Sky, the light so bright I avert my eyes, peering out at the clumps of cattail heads, skinned by Wind, lumps of fur, swathed in light, that transforms them into things of beauty, illuminating the marsh, as I listen to the reeds sway, decay sprawling all around them, the relics of trees, poking from the water, light grazing their ashen remains,
the skin of green sludge coating pockets of the marsh, making me wonder what lurks beneath the surface where light can't reach, what creatures swim in the murky depths, between the roots of cattails and reeds, the milkweed fluff swallowed by Sky, another tuft drifting through Air, landing in the reeds, no red-winged blackbirds singing their chorus, too early in the day or late in the season, I wonder, as I'm struck by the pureness of morning light, swathing the reeds, faded to the colour of wheat, the cattail heads fringed with haloes of light, amplifying the silence of this place, ancient as the humps of hills that rise in the distance, like sleeping beasts, tracing their spines with my eyes, the world beyond them, whirling with motion and noise, far from the stillness of the marsh, and this trail where I stand, sunlight stroking my hands and cheeks, my eyes darting back down towards the marsh, as I blink at the furry brown head bobbing in the water, uncertain what I see, squinting at the creature that's appeared from the depths, resembling a beaver or maybe a muskrat, watching it swim through the water between puddles of sludge, its fish tail suddenly thrashing in the Air, as its head plunges out of sight, silver splashes catching the light, as I stare into the water, waiting to see whether the furry creature with the fish-like tail reappears, light stippling the ripples
it leaves behind,
my eyes wondering what they saw, as they turn their gaze back towards the reeds,
Wind bending their brittle spines as they sway, surrounded by decay,
Life, hiding in the depths, resurfacing sometimes, to catch glimpses of what's up there, inhaling Air and light, streaming down from Sky so smooth and blue, some moments offering clues, how to live and how to be,
as I cup my face up towards late autumn Sun, listening to my Breath, breathe, a feeling of peace washing over me.

Raven Rock

RICK WHITTEKER
Special to County Life

October 31, 20 degrees Celsius – a day where I can paddle gloves and toque free! It is just too tempting, so I strapped the kayak to my roof and headed up to Raven Lake, in search of rock, more specifically, Raven Rock. I have paddled by these impressive cliffs during my work in outdoor leadership with college students but I never had time to really savour the experience. It was time!

The best access is at the Wren Lake access point. At 20786, Highway 35, just north of Sherborne Lake Access Road and tucked into the forest, this access has a paddle friendly shoreline facing a bare rock face across the narrow body of water: a hint of what's to come!

Heading north, the first challenge is a short portage around a dam leading to Raven Lake. After a brief paddle, I rounded a point of land to see the cliffs in the distance. Coincidentally, a raven croaked out is guttural call here reminding me I was on the right lake. Slowly approaching, the expanse of the rock mass comes into focus. Rising fifty plus meters from the water's edge, this rock face is awe inspiring.

Not surprisingly, this site has spiritual significant to the Indigenous People of the area. Called Raven Rock, the name of the lake was drawn from this significant feature and the tendency for ravens to nest here. Likely the result of a geological fault, Precambrian granite and gneiss create sheer cliffs as well as terraced sections with ledges and stunted trees and shrubs.

Massive boulder gardens are piled haphazardly at the base of the cliffs, likely the result of centuries of the freeze/thaw cycle. Colourful lichen, piles of shed pine needles and some very hardy birch, cedar, oak and beech trees cling to life in this nutrient poor environment. Imaging the time it would take for enough soil to form to support a tree in this rock dominated landscape!

It is easy to identify the oaks this time of year as their dark brown leaves still cling to their birth nodes late into the autumn. My gaze was drawn upward as a gust of wind sent a cluster of leaves cascading down from their high perches on the rocky shoreline. Rising and lowering with the air circulation in this cavernous space, the effect was mesmerizing. Like a flock of playful birds, the slender leaves with rounded lobes spun, flipped and fluttered in the mid-afternoon sunshine with a background palate of clear blue sky. A fleeting but magical moment.

The rock face at Raven Lake is awe inspiring.

Raven Rock runs the whole length of the narrow southwest arm of Raven Lake. The cliffs veer inland enough that, if you like rock, two rugged campsites are located along the north shore giving campers great access to rock face exploration.

This narrow arm ends at a portage to Plastic Lake. This bay has large floating mats of moss supporting tamaracks and pine saplings and large clusters of picture plants. But it was time for a walk.

The 700-metre portage to Plastic Lake skirts an impressive beaver pond starting with a boardwalk just below a long, well maintained beaver dam. It was along this pond edge that a flock of chickadees announced their presence. Flitting from branch to branch, calling with great vigor, the air was filled by their tweets and twitters. This is very common for chickadees to go from territorial breeding sites in the spring, to family flocks in summer to blended flocks of six to 10 birds in the fall. Usually comprised of a mating pair, young birds and random "floaters", occasionally birds of other species will join chickadees flocks for fall foraging and roosting warmth.

The portage trail branches to the right and heads uphill, crosses Sherborne Lake Access Road and soon arrives at Plastic Lake. The area all around Plastic Lake and Dawson Ponds is designated as a conservation reserve, one of two in Haliburton County.

Like parks, conservation reserves are selected and designed based on their ecological, geological, and cultural heritage features, and are selected using very specific criteria, but, unlike parks, they do not have a classification system, facilities, programs or closing dates. Environmentally sensitive recreation is allowed like hiking, canoeing, hunting, fishing and research as well as other ecologically sensitive activities. Highly impactful land uses like forestry and mining are excluded from conservation reserves.

Plastic Lake and Dawson Ponds was designated as a conservation reserve to protect the watershed and drainage basin around this area to ensure the integrity of continued long-term (30+ years) of acid rain research. In addition, this designation will protect a rare coastal plain plant community, including provincially rare species.

Pitcher plants thrive in nutrient poor habitats like bogs and fens.

There is so much to see in this quiet section of Raven Lake. With impressive habitats like Raven Rock, floating vegetative islands, beaver ponds and protected areas, this paddle/hike day trip is worth a visit, even if you need to wear a togue and gloves!

Snapshots and stories

KATE BUTLER

Special to County Life

Yesterday, some visitors to the Haliburton Highlands Museum mentioned to me that they had recently purchased a house in the county and that when they moved in, they had discovered boxes of photos there. With the information the visitors had to hand, I was able to give them some leads as to people who might have more information about the individuals captured in the snapshots and who might even be able to provide the right home for the photos, but to be honest, those pictures may still contain mysteries for years to come. It's not uncommon for unidentified photos to come our way at the Haliburton Highlands Museum and I'm sure that many of you have also seen unidentified photos at flea markets and antique shops. Perhaps, you've found them strangely poignant in the same way I have.

It's through stories and details that photos, especially those containing people, take their greatest meaning. While a streetscape's story can often be pieced together through sightlines, the presence of local businesses, the types of automobiles being driven and even whether the roads were paved or not, a photo of a person can sometimes feel more like a mysterious puzzle unless you know that person's identity and story. When looking through photos from Haliburton's past, I always enjoy finding images of familiar figures and discovering what they were up to at particular times in their lives. While they might not be people I ever knew personally, many of them still feel like friends though we might be separated by a century or more.

This feeling of connection across eras can also apply to our own family albums, not only connecting us in a tangible way to our ancestors, but also to family friends of different eras. One picture that springs to mind for me is of a beaming young couple. He has his arm around her, and she's cuddled into his shoulder. That couple, however, doesn't actually appear in my family tree. In fact, Archie boarded with my grandparents. He'd come over from the "old country" and had found a job working with my grandfather. He needed a place to stay, so my grandparents took him in. The young woman in the photo is his sweetheart, and later wife, Lil. Years later, the two families unfortunately lost touch, so I don't know where life's adventures eventually took Archie and Lil, but I do believe they deserve a place in the family album, and I'm so pleased that I know their story and their connection.

As the holiday season arrives and families make plans to gather, it's the perfect time to bring out the family photos, if you're the keeper of them, or to ask others about them, even if you aren't. Share stories about the people in the photos and ask questions about them. Write things down, make notes, make copies and share them around. Even if you know all about the people in the photos, others may not, so take the time to record what you know and let those in the photos live again in a whole new way. The past, the present and the future thank you!

Believe in magic over the holidays

The 2024 Haliburton Highlands Health Services Foundation's Believe in the Magic of Giving Holiday campaign kicks off this week as the holiday spirit warms Haliburton County. This annual drive supports the four pillars of the HHHS Foundation's mission: subsidies for Community Support Services, education grants for health care workers, capital purchases and improvements in long-term care facilities.

Fundraising through the annual Holiday giving campaign is an opportunity to connect with donors and share the heartwarming impact of each gift. This year, grateful patient, Owen, shared his story about how "that little ER ultrasound" sent him on a health journey that thankfully had a positive outcome. Owen committed to making an annual donation to show his gratitude and you can read the full story online at hhhs.ca/foundation.

Donations can be made:

- Online at hhhs.ca/foundation
- In person at the HHHS Foundation office located just inside the main entrance of the HHHS site, 7199 Gelert Road, Haliburton
- In person at the HHHS Minden Site Business Office, 6 McPherson Street, Minden
- After hours drop off in the donation box beside the HHHS Foundation Office entrance
- Or by calling 705-457-1580 during office hours (8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday to Friday)

Alec Harmer, HTM Insurance Company CEO and Drew Carey, President of Vasey Insurance Brokers Ltd. with Melanie Klodt Wong, Executive Director HHHS Foundation. /Submitted

Believe in the Magic of Giving donation forms are included in Haliburton County newspapers through the month of December and the campaign continues to Jan. 12, 2025.

The tradition of adding a new huggable stuffie to the family of Foundation Bears continues ... our new fuzzy family member will be available for sale at local grocery stores and HHHS sites starting Nov. 29. Watch our social channels for more information.

And don't forget to get your 50/50 Lottery tickets for stocking stuffers, neighbourly gifts and friendly thank you gifts especially since this is a double month lottery! The lottery is running for two months, throughout November and December, giving you the chance to win big. Last year's jackpot was $11,300! If you get your tickets now, you'll be entered into both Early Bird Draws for $500 each. The Early Bird Draws will take place on Nov. 22 and Dec. 13 at 9 a.m.

For more information, call us at 705-457-1580 or email foundation@hhhs.ca.

SIRCH has a simple way you can have an immediate impact on those who need help the most. Since 2020, SIRCH's Community Kitchen has made and given out over 86,000 healthy meals – all funded entirely by donations.

Our goal this year is to give out 1,600 meals each month, free, to residents in Haliburton County and North Hastings who are struggling and hungry.

Addition to Minden Community Centre

An addition is being added to the Minden Community Centre at Minden. The extension which is being constructed at the back of the arena will house the Zamboni and will also serve as a storage place for the Carnival equipment which is owned by the Minden Rotary Club.

The new addition which is 40 x 60 is being built by Don Campbell Building Contractor of Minden.

This new project when completed will serve a great many important purposes.

New LCBO store under construction in Minden

The new L.C.B.O. store which is being constructed next to the present Brewers Warehouse store in Minden is well underway, and it won't be too long before it will be open for business. We understand that it will be officially opened sometime in December.

The new store which will replace the old one that is presently located across from the John Welch and Son Ltd. Funeral home will have a larger floor space and more spacious parking facilities for the customers.

Smash windows

There were some incidents of broken windows in the Coboconk OPP detachment area over Hallowe'en, according to the police record. These included two plate glass windows at the Red and White store in Norland with an estimated value of $300. total.

Canadian Legion honours soldiers

On Tuesday morning at the hour of 10 a.m. in the Royal Canadian Legion Auditorium, a service of Remembrance will be held to pay tribute to those brave men who laid down their lives making it possible for us to live in peace and comfort in the finest land under the sun.

Is it asking too much of the citizens of this area to pause on Tuesday morning for an hour to participate in this act of Remembrance.

Following the service at the Legion a parade led by the Haliburton Legion Pipe and Drums will make its way to the Cenotaph on Highland Street for the laying of the wreaths and the act of Remembrance at 11 a.m. Everyone is invited to take part in these services.

In the evening a Remembrance Day dinner will be held in the Royal Canadian Legion for Legionaires and their wives and/or friend.

Construction began on new resort complex

Construction began this week on the new resort complex to be known as The Pinestone Inn and Country Club. The resort is being developed by One 2 One Corporation and the General Contractor is Rusgate Construction, Toronto. Architect for the Inn is Gordon Ridgely of Hamilton, Ridgely and Bennett, Toronto. Completion target date is June 1, 1976.

The Inn will contain 36 motel style units, a dining room with 90 seats, cocktail lounge with 80 seats, a banquet and conference room for 100 persons.

The President of Rusgate Construction, Mr. Perry Connelly, was most impressed with the site for the new Inn as well as the progress being made on the Golf Course. Mr Connelly who has built fourteen Holiday Inns in Ontario and the Caribbean expects his full crews to be on the site by November 15th.

The President of One 2 One Corporation, Mr. Wren Blair, was also in town this weekend to sign the construction contracts and to have a quiet weekend away from the hockey wars.

Plea for Industrial Base Aid

Eakins urges more help for smaller communities

Liberal MPP John Eakins of Victoria-Haliburton has urged the Provincial Government to assist smaller communities in Ontario in the development of a stronger industrial base.

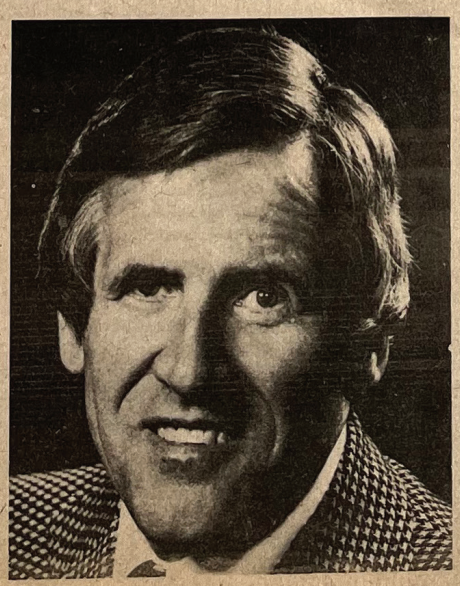
Mr. Eakins did this during discussion of the estimates of the Ontario Ministry of Industry and Tourism.

"Last January the government announced plans for spending literally millions of dollars on a new industrial park in the Spencerville area of Eastern Ontario," said Mr. Eakins, "and I feel very strongly that the money involved would be used to much greater advantage by being given to communities across the province which desperately need assistance in developing a stronger industrial base.

"Apparently the minister of industry and tourism feels that there is virtually nothing his ministry can do to attract industry to specific areas; but undoubtedly his ministry and the provincial government as a whole has a direct responsibility to make decisions on the future development of Metropolitan Toronto, for example.

"Urban development is progressing at a pace which is evidently out of control, from the point of view of housing, transportation facilities, and the entire socio-economic situation is a matter of concern to people living in the Metro area. The people of Toronto have voiced their own feelings very clearly by their choice of elected officials in the last three or four years. There is a great need for a slow down in the development and expansion of the metropolitan area. London, England, faced with a similar situation took action in this connection by creating a greenbelt around the city and giving enormous incentives to the location of industry in areas away from the metropolis.

"Our small communities are experiencing great difficulties. They are losing their young people and their skilled workers to the cities because that is where the jobs are to be found." Industry is attracted to the city core because of the availability of manpower. We have, in effect, a vicious circle, and we must take action before we have a crisis on our hands.



"Sooner or later we must take the bull by the horns, and inaugurate an over-all provincial plan of development to assist our smaller communities. In some cases a population increase of 2,000 people would be of tremendous assistance, whilst even 500 people would make a noticeable difference in other areas. At the same time, we would be removing some of the intense pressure being experienced in our urban centres."

Addressing his remarks to the minister, Mr. Eakins recalled that last February 21st, while, addressing the Haliburton Highlands Chamber of Commerce, you noted that my riding has contributed substantially to the province's tourism industry. As you said Mr. Minister, Haliburton is one of the major growth areas in Ontario in terms of private cottage growth: in fact our growth rate is faster than province-wide figures.

"I mention this Mr. Chairman, to underscore the importance of these estimates - they are important to Victoria-Haliburton and they are important to Ontario. On that point Mr. Minister, let me say, I share your concern on tenders extended by the Organizating Committee for the 1976 Olympic Games. In particular I quote from the Globe and Mail that the only companies who need apply are those "having their principal place of business in the Province of Quebec and able to manufacture..in Quebec.." Now we all find this offensive. But Mr. Minister, I cannot agree with your fellow Cabinet Minister, the Treasurer, who said that "as the biggest and wealthiest Province in Confederation, we have to live with this."
